To Whom It May Concern:

We provide legal counsel to iVoterGuide and advise concerning permissible voter education activities, which charitable institutions such as 501(c)(3) groups may undertake.

It is our professional opinion that merely providing a link to the iVoterGuide.com website for interested persons to obtain information about candidates for state and federal office in their localities would by no means violate IRS restrictions on the activities of charitable 501(c)(3) organizations. An individual using the link would reach the iVoterGuide.com homepage, which contains no campaign intervention, but does allow access to valuable voter guide information.

If an individual desires to access more restricted information such as iVoterGuide's scoring of candidates, the individual would have to make a deliberate decision and click through several additional steps before such information is reached. Accordingly, a mere link to the iVoterGuide homepage would not constitute impermissible campaign intervention.

Under these circumstances, we do not believe any 501(c)(3) organization making the link available would be engaged in campaign intervention.

Very truly yours,
